SD Tip (Synthetic Unplated Diamond Tip)

Synthetic Diamonds, also known as lab-grown diamonds, are artificially produced gemstones that possess the same chemical composition, crystal structure, and optical and physical properties as their natural counterparts. In contrast, Natural Diamonds are formed through geological processes over millions of years.

One of the key advantages of the SD - Synthetic Diamonds is their uniform hardness, which contrasts with the variability often found in Natural Diamonds due to their formation processes. Additionally, Synthetic Diamonds are generally more cost-effective than Natural Diamonds, with a stable supply that makes them ideal for a variety of applications.

Composition of Natural and Synthetic Diamonds

	Chemical composition	Crystalline	Heat conduction	Hardness	Density	Refractive index	Degree of dispersion
Natural Diamond	C	High	Equiaxed	10	3.51	2.42	0.044
Synthetic Diamond	C	High	Equiaxed	10	3.51	2.42	0.044

[Features]

- SD Tip (Synthetic Unplated Diamond Tip) has a full diamond structure like the NUDE Tip (Natural Unplated Diamond Tip).
- The tip's diameter is $\varnothing 0.25\text{mm}$, the same shape as Bonded Diamond tips.
- It possesses the same hardness as Natural Diamonds.
- The tip shape is conical and the lifespan is approximately 200 hours.
